Dates have been redacted in preparation of this Exhibit.

3. Exhibit A, the "Disclosure of Invention," discloses an invention that considers the viewing history of an individual in parts and generates multiple user profiles in response to the viewing histories. The invention considers sub-sets of the entire view history, wherein each sub-set is created by either taking a uniform random sampled sub-set of television shows from an entire view history or affiliating a sub-set to a time-span that is less than the entire time period that the view history spans.

4. The specification of the present application discloses at page 8, lines 10-25 and Figure 2, the processing of the viewing history of a system user. The invention considers the viewing history of an individual and generates multiple user profiles in response to the viewing histories. The invention establishes sub-sets of a user's entire view history, wherein each sub-set is created by either taking a uniform random sampled sub-set of television shows from an entire viewing history or affiliating a sub-set to a time-span that is less than the entire time period that the view history spans.

5. Exhibit A, the "Disclosure of Invention," discloses that for each sub-set of a view history the present invention builds a user-profile and generates recommendation scores using the present invention in conjunction with existing recommendation engine technology.

6. The specification of the present application discloses at page 8, lines 26-33, that for each sub-set of a view history the present invention builds a user-profile that corresponds to a particular time span. Further, the invention generates recommendation scores using the present invention in conjunction with existing recommendation engine technology.
